Sacramento-Sierra Building & Construction Trades Council Endorses Downtown Dova

Rancho Cordova union members will build the downtown their hometown never had, under the city's first-ever Community Workforce and Training Agreement

RANCHO CORDOVA, Calif. – The Sacramento-Sierra's Building & Construction Trades Council representing more than 15,000 union construction workers is endorsing Downtown Dova, the privately funded sports, entertainment, and hospitality district planned for Highway 50 and Sunrise Boulevard. The Trades Council has backed the project from the beginning, with support going beyond the construction work. Members of the council are excited about what Downtown Dova will mean for Rancho Cordova for generations to come.

Hundreds of Trades Council members live in Rancho Cordova. For them, Downtown Dova is elevating the community. It gives the City a real downtown, a central place for the community to gather. It will bring concerts, professional sports, restaurants, shopping and year-round events to their own neighborhoods. It will also create jobs, strengthen local businesses and raise the value of the homes their families live in.

"Our members are proud to build Downtown Dova, but what really excites them is what it means for their families and neighbors," said Kevin Ferreira, Executive Director of the Sacramento-Sierra's Building & Construction Trades Council. "Rancho Cordova has never had a downtown, a place where the whole community comes together. Now it will have one, with concerts, games, great restaurants and thousands of jobs, right here at home. We've supported this project from day one because it is a transformational development that will elevate Rancho Cordova for future generations."

The arena will be built under a Community Workforce and Training Agreement (CWTA), the first in Rancho Cordova's history. It guarantees area-standard wages, benefits and safety standards, and it opens apprenticeship pathways into the trades for local residents.
